Dear Bill:

Sometime back I sent you a packet of material that had been sent to me from the White House. Herewith is another packet of additional material from the same individual.

I don't know if this is meaningful or not, but if you will note in the covering letter he mentions assassinations, etc. I pass this on to you for any use that your Agency might make of it. My main concern is that this person now has taken to including my name in his correspondence.

I hope you are well. I know you are doing a great job and I look forward to seeing you in the not-too-distant future.

Best wishes for your continued success, good health and a degree of happiness which I know you have earned.

Most cordially,

Dear Bill:

I am forwarding the enclosed in the hope that you might have someone on your staff review this material and ascertain if this individual poses any danger to the President or the White House staff.

My prime reason for seeking your assistance is that this material was forwarded to me from the White House. It came registered mail. I have been away from the White House since October, 1981, but this individual might be working from an old roster.

I appreciate your help in this regard. If it amounts to nothing, then it's round file material. However, I feel it is better to be safe than sorry in view of past events involving the President.

I hope all is well with you and that life has become a bit more enjoyable. Our prayers are with you and yours and best wishes for continued success and good health.

Most sincerely,

RMG:fm
